Am I a good candidate for a lip lift?
In the past, lip lifts were reserved for patients over the age of 55. Additionally, the procedure was normally only performed on people with lighter, thinner skin due to the higher possibility of scars forming after the procedure. Advancements in technology and techniques now allow us to perform a lip lifting procedure on people as young as 20, regardless of skin color.

Can everyone have a lip lift?
There are some people who are not suited for this procedure. One of the most common reasons for unsuitability is a significantly higher proportion of the teeth that show. If lifting the lip would result in further showing of the teeth, the patient won’t get the desired result of improving his or her features. However, a referral to a cosmetic dentist who can perform a tooth shortening treatment may address this issue. In those cases, the procedure may still be an option.

How long will it take to show results?
Typical results will begin to show after about three weeks. You will be able to go about your daily life, without any noticeable signs that you have had the procedure done. You will be provided with follow-up treatment to help reduce swelling and ensure that you are healing as expected.

As your lip settles, you will begin to notice further improvements. After three to four months, you will see the full benefit of having the procedure. However, you can look forward to seeing more definition and a better lip ratio a year after your lip lift.

There are few other procedures which continue to show results for such a long period after treatment has been completed. Our new patients are often referred based on positive feedback from past patients on this one aspect of treatment alone.
